Baahubali 2: Why Bollywood can't make a film like

No one from Bollywood made quite as much noise as Ram Gopal Verma before the release of Bahubali 2. RGV might be a pale imitation of past glory and razor sharp wit, but his comment on Bahubali 2 was telling. Film maker SS Rajamouli's 'Bahubali 2: The conclusion' has a set a new record in Indian cinema. It has collected Rs 1000 crore in Indian and overseas markets combined in just ten days, therefore becoming the highest grossing Indian movie ever. Arka Media, the producers of the movie, made an announcement here on Sunday that the magnum opus had indeed achieved this rare feat. Trade tracker Ramesh Bala also confirmed the record through his tweet that Bahubali 2 had collected Rs 800 cr in Indian and Rs 200 cr in the overseas market.

The Government is keen on using the film to promote Indian cinema abroad and exhibit local techniques and movie expertise and likely to showcase Bahubali films as Make in India success story.

The makers of Baahubali deserve nothing less than a salute for peeping into the future and pumping in 430 cr into this colossal project. The pre-production work, which took more than a year, witnessed the making of a whole new language (reminiscent of Avatar by James Cameron), original weapon design and a powerful central role for women smartly in sync with contemporary times. Any such act by a Bollywood producer would be unthinkable.

In 2015, Karan Johar who presents the film in Hindi prophesied before the film's release, "Bahubali is something that Hindi cinema has not witnessed before."

Which is why, more often than not, younger movie stars are NOT part of films that you remember.

Their highly visible faces might be popping out at you everywhere, but they aren't in celluloid stories that you care to recall once you leave a theatre.

Einstein Tongue : Inspires Us By Experiencing Mistakes

Udaipur: Every person in life knows his mistakes but generally ignores. He deliberately misbehaves in ignorance, but he does not take lessons from deliberate mistakes and repeats mistakes by mistakes. If he chooses the correct path by taking lessons from mistakes done than, it can change the path of his life, and by experiencing it the experience gained by author is thrown into a book named Einstein Tongue, the internationally renowned architect Sunil Lodha added that This book was launched in a function organized for this in a press conference held he said that This work of word-art intends to act as inspiration to all those who intend to commit new mistakes rather than repeating the same ones. The stories compiled are real life experiences. Names of people have been addressed as 'him/her' to respect their privacy. Every incident in life, every product we use and every person we meet, teaches us, something. The book aims to help develop a different perspective towards day to day, the normally ignored life experiences, thereby inching towards the learning curve. The stories can be read randomly from whatever page one likes. here are no sequences in learning. Life teaches lessons randomly and so does this book. Interpretations of the incidents may vary, but ultimately the aim is to evolve. The happenings and incidents made me think, lets listen to EINSTEIN'S TONGUE to see if it triggers!!! Happy reading!!!

Co-writer Amit Gaurav said that every event in life, we use every product and every person meets us, teaches us. The purpose of the book helps in developing a different perspective day by day. In general, the experience of the unseen life, which leads to the learning curve, Stories from any page can be read. The interpretation of events may vary, but ultimately its purpose is to develop positivity. I think the incidents and events that were included in it let me see if it triggers. Listen to Einstein and read it and enjoy it. Book publisher Rajeev Sethi said that this is his 300th volume published by his company. as a first edition its four and a half thousand books have been published which will be spread across the entire nation. He said that the mission to change the lives of readers mainly youngones called 'Asap', will work to raise awareness among the poor children and boys who studied in the higher education from the children of slumps. The book's graphics are composed by Delhi Dhamani. Which has given different graphics to everyone and added life in facts The happenings and incidents made me think, lets listen to EINSTEIN'S TONGUE to see if it triggers!!! Happy reading!!!
