

Udaipur of Future

We are in the middle of the Summer and the heat is at peak. Of course, the day-hours have become difficult to bear with. But the good part is that both ends of the day remain pleasant and cool. People do avoid roaming out under the Sun but they can enjoy the mornings and evenings. This is something that most of the other North Indian cities are not blessed with. Udaipur is the beneficiary of its location of undulating Aravali Hills which are green, covered, and undisturbed. The ecosystem of the city is such that it is cool by nature. The heat even in the day is bearable and won't pinch you. You may be sweating but not feeling any itching which denotes that a city is still a non-polluted place.

But, the future may not be the same. The way vehicles are increasing every passing day, not only congestion is going up but pollution is also reaching at an alarming stage. But, today still is a situation where we can bring it back to normal. The surroundings are still green which needs to be preserved but the need is to plant more saplings. And apart from that, the more important requirement is to save these plants. Most of the times we see people planting, getting pictures clicked, and the story gets over. Soon such plants either die starving or fall prey to street animals. An idea can be floated across residents of each of the colonies that each family must take responsibility of a plant and be its guardian at least, until it becomes an independent tree. People generally do not allow cutting or chopping of trees that they plant. On the same ground, the Lakes must be kept safe from sewage contamination. A great improvement has been observed in public behavior in the dumping of wrappers into Lakes. But more such awareness ideas must be floated to educate people. The idea should not be to tell people to keep a city clean because the administration wants so. Rather, a sense of ownership should be infused and people should be taken into confidence that the city is their own. A clean city would be like living in a clean house.

The divide between administration and the common public must be removed so that people can feel connected. Then, for any effort by the government would be supported by people. The campaign 'Action Udaipur' has been a big hit and similar ideas are needed where public participation is increased.

An Eye Opener For Graduate & Postgraduate Studies

Jaipur: Parenting has always been a challenge and when it comes to career or higher education of their wards, it is almost like reinventing a wheel. The present education system, particularly with so many private universities and colleges, is very confusing to select the right course or the college. Conventional Science stream would make a better career or do humanities pay well? Stuck between social and peer pressure, the student is confused between what to study and where to study. "We have developed a series of educational fairs and summits for Jaipur and other cities in the State of Rajasthan to close this gap between "available choices" and "touch point" for the students and their parents to meet University representatives directly." Says Mr Ashish Sharma, Director of Shubhek Education Pvt Ltd and organizers of the Summit.

"This thought came to me after watching the disintegration and malpractices that exist in this industry for last three years. In a few years from now, Rajasthan would vouch to see the education admission process change through roof to enable parents' skilling themselves rather than just seeking intermediaries. We have developed a unique forum where student & parents connect with University authorities regularly. Our "think tank" has over 3 decades of industry experience. It's a visionary step in creating a new benchmark," asserts Mr Sharma.

The first historic change is happening around 5th to 7th May in World Trade Park, Malviya Nagar. This Education Summit arranged by Shubhek has roped in several reputed names, like, Bennett, Jindal, Indus, Raffles, Ansal, GSFC, S.P. Jain, MIT-ADT and Rennes Business School from France.

The counseling centre at the Summit adds great value in counselling the students and their parents. It is history to see even studious students opting out of Engineering or Medicine and choosing unconventional career like: Illustrative designer, Ghost writers, Photography, Design, Social media writing and blogging etc.

The thronging students and parents at the summit are not only seeking knowledge and tools but also creating a future for the benefit of Jaipur city by learning and sharing. Shubhek is all set to create a different perspective through its Higher Education Forum - a platform for parents and institutions to interact directly to match the requirements between the seekers.
