Experts warn Botox before you're 30 is a waste

YOUNG women rushing to have Botox and fillers are not only wasting money but could end up with distorted, "flabby" faces, experts warn. Once you reach it is useful some wanting to turn back the clock, ageing twenty are turning to Botox and fillers, with some clinics reporting 40 per cent of their client are in 20s. But dermatologist Dr Michael Freeman said using Botox in your 20s was a waste of money. Experts say young celebs like Kylie Jenner are fuelling a Botox boom. Picture: Dimitrios Kambouris/Christabel Ona (left) and Kirsten Tiplady (right) say Botox in your 20s is pointless. "Botox in your 20s is pointless, skin in your 20s is incredibly elastic," Dr Freeman, a member of the Australasian College of Dermatologists, said. "Botox is great once you have wrinkles." Using Botox at an early age also risked the one in 20 chance of developing antibodies to botulinum toxin. "If you use Botox over your whole life there is a 6% chance that you develop antibodies so it won't work later on," he said. Dr Freeman also warned young women risk getting flabby skin. "If you overfill and plump up like some of these young women you run the risk of distorting tissue that ends up flabby," he said. If you overfill you run the risk of distorting tissue that ends up flabby. "It would be better to train not to use those frown muscles, put a piece of sticky tape between your eyebrows and when you frown you can feel it, so you can learn not to use those muscles. There are positive things young women can do; if you are a smoker, stop; wearing sunscreen will do more to protect your beauty than anything else and explore makeup if you want to change your appearance." Dr Naomi McCallum, a self-proclaimed "doll-maker" from the Manse Clinic in Paddington, said 40 per cent of her clientele were in their 20s and influenced by the likes of Kylie and Kendall Jenner. At Sydney's Rejuvenation Clinics of Australia, Dr Garry Cussell said his under-30 clients for Botox and fillers had grown from 27 per cent to 36 per cent since 2015.

Christobel Ona has been using Botox and dermal fillers since she was 21. "It's just for confidence and there is a lot of pressure from social media, you see a lot of beautiful people on Facebook and Instagram and there is a standard there and you want to be beautiful," she said. A spokeswoman for Allergan, the company that makes Botox, said it was not designed for women and men in their 20s.

Now Dadi And Nani Tales in Schools

Jaipur: State Education minister Vasudev Devanani is thinking round the clock how the Education be reformed so that our rich heritage clicks in the mindset of kids and young ones keeping in view The stories of Dadi Nani will be the part of education.

Grandparents in the form of Dadi and Nani have been a wonderful source of stories for children since ages. Even now the charm of being with grandparents is heartwarming for the kids as they get to hear stories which end in morals teaching the kids some or the other important values of life since the elderly people have a unique way of telling stories. It has been decided on a government level to bring out these stories from the enclosures of home to school. These stories are basically to impart cultural lessons to the children who miss out on these in the fast running world of today. Mostly both parents are now working parents and the job hours restrict their lives to such an extent that by the end of the day they are not left with enough energy to read out or tell stories to their children. Stories also show a personal touch in the life of a child as they become an interactive session between parents and kids.

The task of storytelling has been done by grandparents since a long time as their experiences of life are much more than anyone else. From now on schools will be encouraging such story telling sessions to enrich the kids with the values of life which are meant to make them a better person. Learning about traditional values through stories develops a child's interest in culture and the most needed sense of respect for Indian culture is enhanced.

Director for Board of Secondary Education, Bikaner, has given instructions for story sessions on Second Saturday of every month. All educational institutes will have to compulsorily hold such sessions. Every second Saturday, some elderly woman or students' Dadi or Nani will be invited to school to be part of the story telling activities.

This will prove to be an encouraging step for the better mental development of the kids who are otherwise deprived of lessons on Indian culture due to hectic schedules of learning in the fixed format of education pattern.
