CA Harshita Jain brings innovative educational tools for children in villages

Udaipur: Chartered Accountant Harshita Jain has found a mission very early in life. At the age of twenty-two, she has founded a social initiative Kala

Akshar to provide innovative school education to children in remote villages of Rajasthan. The purpose of Kala Akshar is to reduce school dropout rate in Rajasthan.

Harshita, decided to start Kalaakshaar NGO after multiple visits to Rajasthan and discovering high level of dropout rates among school children. "Apart from financial reasons, children in remote villages also drop out because of poor engagement. I have observed kids from interiors are very smart, but are uncommunicative and lose interest in traditional educational modules," said Harshita Jain.

She believes, even if government and NGOs ensure infrastructure support the kids need to remain engaged so that they themselves would look forward to school each day.

Kala Akshar takes a game-based creative learning approach. It also partners with community members and parents of children and educates them about financial inclusion, nutritional requirements and overall welfare of children. It also installs smart digital boards at schools for increased participation. Kala Akshar has started its operations in Udaipur District and has reached about 500 students so far. Its recent camp in Kadechavas village, which is about two hours from Udaipur was a resounding success. Kids were taught various subjects through indoor and outdoor games, paintings etc. A doctor was also part of the camp and explained kids and their parents about the importance of de-worming and how it improves nutritional intake and keeps them healthy. Kala Akshar brings corporate executives, senior students from schools in large cities to immerse in the programs and impart their knowledge during the engagements. School teachers and community elders are very positive about partnering with Kala Akshar.

"We have seen increased participation from students and we would try to partner and replicate more such teaching methods across Rajasthan to reduce school dropout," said Jain.

"I know it is an ambitious thought but I strongly believe it is possible through community initiatives, smart and engaging educational modules," said Jain. Rajasthan has one of the highest school dropout rates in India.

Kala Akshar has reached about 500 students so far in 2017 and aims reach 5000 student in the next two years.
