

Judiciary Speaks

If one department of the administration system in India is badly pressed, it is the judiciary of course. Cases run for decades. People die in jail without even being tried once. And on the other hand, culprits scot-free on the pretext of false affidavits. And now the differences of apex judges have come public. All this has reaffirmed in the public that the judiciary not only needs massive and focused attention, it also needs an overhaul. The biggest issue, of course, is a number of courts and availability of judges. A number of cases are piling up on daily basis and a very few get cleared. The entire institution needs a reform but this is not like any election where people can take a decision. The system has its own procedure and the government has a role to play.

For fair justice, the system needs to be within reach and for that you need numbers. Like hospitals and schools, a number of courts is the need to expedite the justice system. As of now, hospitals, schools, and judiciary, all are in a shape that cannot take the country forward.

Fortunately for people who can afford, education and medical services are there in private field but you cannot go anywhere for facilities like police or justice.

No doubt India has progressed overwhelmingly since independence to be able to step onto Mars and assist the world in projecting their space programs but some basics need massive correction. Judiciary has been an overburdened institution always. Being overworked, still, the system has not been able to facilitate the timely justice to the common man. The political influence and being a blindfolded structure has also hurt many cases. There have been issues where the culprit was there but just because pieces of evidence speak otherwise, the conviction gets turned into an acquisition.

Not just we need more judges and public lawyers, we also need an overhaul. People's faith in justice has been one of the most powerful features of our culture which is fast fading. The common belief that justice can be influenced by might and money is fast prevailing in the society and this is why people shy away from lodging complains or filing cases.

This must change. Some departments must be so transparent that even a theft of a pen worth rupees 2 gets highlighted. And for that, we need to add a huge number of court benches to the existing system. Not just judges, the staff, infrastructure, and other resources are needed to fix all that we need to get timely justice. The government can also mull over having mobile courts where justice can be made available at the spot. In most of the cases, evidence that are present at the crime scene are easily cleaned up. And Imagine how can you expect a murder would be justified after a couple of years of the incident? Not at all. People can be influenced and pieces of evidence can be cooked up. So whosoever has the might to change evidence and money to influence people can turn the decision in their favor.

A new structure in consonance with the people should be drafted where they feel empowered. Getting justice should be easy and free. There should be a fear among criminals and confidence in innocence people. Getting away after committing a crime must be most difficult.

This is possible. Ancient India had a culture of justice and we have read that a lot. This is possible. All we need is a total overhaul and inclusion of people in people's system. And yes, it's time we also listen to the judges who have something to say.

DBWRF Commits to Enabling and Empowering Members of Society

Udaipur: The Dawoodi Bohra Women's Association for Religious Freedom (DBWRF), a trust committed to promote and encourage the Dawoodi Bohra women by working towards their empowerment, has launched forward-looking outreach programmes as part of their Power of Giving campaign. The programmes will drive solutions - both within and outside the Dawoodi Bohra community - which will strive to benefit all members of our society.

The outreach programmes - DBWRF Digital Literacy Certification Project, Project Roshni and Aid 101, will drive solutions pertaining to digital literacy, awareness around first-aid kits and end-to-end services for differently abled children. Whilst self-sustenance is at the heart of these programmes, members working on individual programmes will be empowered to seek improvements, derive and execute on insights and ensure that each programme is driven by smooth delivery and round-the-clock solutions.

To elaborate on these outreach programmes:

DBWRF Digital Literacy Certification Project

The DBWRF Digital Literacy Certification Project is a community-wide digital literacy programme for women of all age-groups from the Dawoodi Bohra community. At its core, this is an educative programme where the intent is to equip and empower women to use digitally enabled solutions in all walks of life.

Project Roshni

Project Roshni is an outreach programme where members of DBWRF will partner with a school working closely with differently-abled children. The outreach programme will be aimed towards providing end-to-end solutions towards the child's academic and personal growth.

Aid 101

An awareness drive aimed at women from the Dawoodi Bohra community where experts will educate women on the need to maintain a first-aid kit at home. The program will be round-the-clock vigilant where medicines and medical equipment repositories are monitored and changed as per requirements.

Ms Samina Kanchwala - Secretary, DBWRF said, "The motivation behind Power of Giving came about thanks to the principles and teachings of our spiritual leader. As a trust, DBWRF hopes to establish itself as solution enablers and facilitators and this ethos is at the crux of each of the outreach programmes that constitute Power of Giving. Our trust has the unshakable support of over 65,000 Dawoodi Bohra Women, and we are confident we will be able to positively impact various sections of our society which will in turn better and empower society as a whole. Moreover, as this is a self-sustaining process, we will encourage women from our community to drive these programmes with new ideas, efficient processes and constant vigilance, all of which will be essential in our goal to ensure delivery and impact."

With soaring demand on these sectors, we are hopeful that these flights will prove to be popular among our customers".

'Blood component expresser' invented

Om Beniwal, a 32-year old contractual lab assistant from Udaipur has invented a 'blood component expresser' machine that can separate blood components separately. This invention can have wide ranging impact by minimising the tendency of blood transfusion reactions. This machine will probably replace the usual process to separate red blood cells (RBCs), white blood cells (WBCs), platelets and plasma from a donated blood. It is not possible to separate RBC and WBC with existing indigenous machines.

While machine developed by Om will cost Rs 3 Lakh, similar machines imported from Germany and UK cost around Rs 25 Lakh to Rs 30 Lakh.

Beniwal had been receiving technical and financial assistance since 2014 from incubation cell at Udaipur set up by state higher education department along with DST.

State Higher education minister said that machine will bring transformational change in blood transfusion. He has asked health department of Rajasthan to review the machine and consider it for health centres across Rajasthan.
