Move On!

It is commonly observed that people get disturbed easily. They are so vulnerable in this front that even an unknown person on the way can trigger a bad day for them. And if we analyze, most of the people fall into this category. It takes a small comment or remark that leaves people in unrest. The person who gave you the unrest moves on and so should you, but you don't. And that's the reason we remain unhappy most of the times. Recall the time when a biker took a sharp cut ahead of you and left you upset. Another idiot who jumped a red light and forced you to apply brakes abruptly. Why should I move on when the matter hasn't settled yet-is the question your brain would pop as soon as you try and appease yourself. But then you should seek inspiration. And to look for the inspiration, you do not need to look outside or inside. All you need to realize is that the clock is ticking. The time has moved on. An instance happened in office took place at 11:35 a.m. today, and it's already 4:29 p.m.

Editorial

You will get your answer easily. You will know what paradigm the God has designed the world with? It keeps on moving. Things are bound to happen, so they do. And time is bound to move on after the instance is over, so should you. But its not just that you move on without any takeaway. For any instance, you get a lesson to learn. So pick up the lesson and dump all the silly words, stupid gestures, and fake attitudes. Simply throw all the packaging outside the window of your moving Time Car. Pick up the food it had. Eat well and move on!

This does not make you coward or weak; rather you know that you followed the rules and were on the right side. It takes a lot of courage to be right when you could easily jump the signal or thrashed the other guy.

You need to value your time. Do not spend your valuable and precious time on others, especially unknowns on the road. Avoid brawls, and you will earn more peace of mind. This peace is priceless.

Adding value to life; rising by uplifting others— Prajakta Shukre

Success in life never comes easy, and keeping your feet on the ground while at it is even more arduous. Well, Prajakta Shukre an Indian playback singer and performer knows her grounds too well and is determined to help others by lifting them towards success.

Coming from a very small town in Madhya Pradesh, Prajakta had a simple childhood with beautiful memories that she still cherishes. At a very young age, Prajakta knew that her destiny was music, but who knew that her talent and desire for pursuing it would grow inside the kitchen with her master while cooking. Music was not just a part of her life, it was her life. Her goals in life were pretty clear even at that tender age and to fulfill her dreams, her father turned out to be her biggest motivator. Her journey started from her monumental winning of the "Lata Mangeshkar Alankaran Award" in her state at just the age of 14. Her journey towards finding her life in music took her to the stage of Indian Idol, while she was still in her 12th standard. She still remembers her audition day, as to how she had to wait for 12 hours in line just for the audition and how her father stood beside her during those long 12 hours. She still remembers sharing a cup of coffee, at a high end café with her father after winning the audition. Today, she's a hardworking girl who's taken her big steps towards a successful and meaningful life. Prajakta always says that learning is the first step towards success. Learning made her versatile and always gave her an edge over the others. Her mantra for success was simple, don't give up and keep knocking opportunity's door, one day it will open up to you. After seeing the success she always wanted in her life; Prajakta soon realised the importance of proper guidance and direction for the budding artists in the country today. It finally came to her mind that when you're clueless, a little help from listening to people who've already been through this helps you a lot. It does not let you repeat the mistakes they made. So to succour them in their struggling times, she has used social media as an aid to assist the new generation of budding musicians and answer their questions and doubts about music, its industry and the insides by the help of platforms like emails and Facebook live sessions. This initiative comes from her values in life; she always has the intention of lifting others while walking towards the path of success in life.

"I want to add the value that I can give to their hard work, by helping them in every way I can." were Prajakta's words when asked about her distinctive initiatives.
