Impact of Low Voter Turnout in Rajasthan Elections : Ministerial Heads to Roll?

The recent elections in Rajasthan have seen a lower voter turnout compared to the 2019 Lok Sabha elections. Out of the 200 assembly constituencies in the state, only 175 witnessed a decrease in voter participation compared to the previous elections.

This trend has raised concerns among political circles, particularly regarding the performance of key leaders and ministers. Traditionally, the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) has placed significant emphasis on booth management, aiming to ensure maximum voter turnout. Prime Minister Narendra Modi himself has repeatedly urged party workers to mobilize more voters to the polling booths to secure the party's victory. Despite efforts by the Election Commission to increase voter awareness, voter apathy seems to have prevailed.

Several factors, including scorching heat and a high number of wedding ceremonies during the polling days, have been cited as reasons for the low voter turnout. However, BJP leaders have expressed dissatisfaction with the situation, particularly in the constituencies of Chief Minister Bhajan Lal Sharma, former Chief Minister Ashok Gehlot, Vasundhara Raje, and Sachin Pilot. If adverse results emerge due to the low voter turnout in Rajasthan, there is speculation that Ministerial heads in the state government could roll. The top leadership of the BJP has made it clear that ministers should ensure a significant margin of victory for the party's candidates in their respective assembly constituencies. Failure to do so might have consequences.

Party sources suggest that around fifteen legislators have been subtly reminded that if the party achieves a substantial victory in their constituencies and the BJP candidate wins, their status might elevate in the anticipated cabinet reshuffle in July-August.

It is notable that in the previous assembly elections held in November last year, the victory margin in the constituencies of Deputy Chief Minister Diya Kumari and other ministers was substantial.

The same is expected this time, with a greater margin of victory anticipated in the constituencies of certain ministers.

After the election results, the party will also evaluate the performance of its ministers' booths. It has been observed that while leaders may win elections, they sometimes face defeat in their own booths in subsequent polls. The results of the Lok Sabha elections will have repercussions not only on the expansion and reshuffling of the state cabinet but also on the ministerial portfolios. The victory margins of ministers such as Sanjay Sharma, Gautam Kumar Dak, Jabbar Singh Khara, Hiralal Nagar, Otaram Devasi, Manju Bagmar, Vijay Singh, KK Vishnoi, and Jawahar Singh Bedia will be closely scrutinized.
